They followed each sound effect with a joint cheer: "Feels so good!" It must have felt good, too, when three judges voted to move them along in the competition.

A slice in the dark: Aaron Crow

The magician, no stranger to danger, wasn't quite as spooky as The Sacred Riana, but he put the judges and audience on edge with his version of the silent treatment.

The imposing performer scared Mandel further when he brought the judge and two audience assistants on stage, hot-waxed his eyes shut, covered his head in layers and then swung his sword in various stunts, like slicing a pineapple perched on top of Mandel's head. It brought Mandel to his knees, out of either acclaim or relief. Crow moved on with a unanimous vote.

5 For his next act, he'll throw in the kitchen sink: Hans, International Superstar

Sadly, Sethward the human caterpillar found his act didn't have legs. RON BALZ/DUFFY/NBC with a "Cabaret"-inspired accordion solo that turned into a rip-roaring rendition of "Proud Mary" capped by an impressive — and cringe-inducing — leg split. He moved on with unanimous votes.

6 And one unforgettable act (believe us, we've tried): Sethward, the (human) 'comedian caterpillar.'

"AGT" segment downward with Sethward, a human caterpillar with a grating high-pitched voice who became the comedic version of a traffic accident: a horrific mess you can't stop looking at—except when it appears this so-called butterfly flashed the judges. "You have a hole in your stockings," Klum said.

All four gave Sethward the heave-ho. He was so bad... oh, heck, he's just bad! But give the hapless performer vocabulary points for using the word "chrysalis." No real caterpillars were harmed in this segment, but comedy clearly was a casualty.
